THE DIARY OF AN ENGAGED GIRL

JACK FINDS LINDSEY ADORING AS EVER.

Jack came early this evening, and we had the loveliest time. Told him all about my work on the Leader, and how I had been commended by Mr. Head to make the good stuff I could get held of while in Europe, and all that. He was awfully proud.

Tells me that his friends and family are all very much impressed at his being the fiancé of the girl-artist who is doing such clever drawings for New York's most popular evening paper.

He seemed so pleased, dear boy, to find that I was just as natural and affectionate as ever, despite my leap into the limelight. In his conversation I gathered from his conversation that he had rather expected me to change, in some way or other.

That was quite natural, for no doubt success, especially the sudden variety does go to most young women's heads, and cause them to swell, and I suppose that Jack must have thought same. But not so with yours truly's little beau—nay, nay, I am the calm, composed, poised young thing that I have always been, and intend to stay thus for a long while.

Jack was more adoring than he has been for a long time. I guess it was this reaction at discovering that his fiancée was as completely all his own as ever before. Truth to tell, there is nothing like success, plus hard work, for making a man love you a lot of loving from the man of his heart! That's strictly orthodox. But doesn't it stand to reason that after toiling and doing something that is worth while one should want to come home and tell it all to one's lover, and hear him marvel, and hug and kiss and praise? That's what the fun of being successful!

My dear old Jack played up to my emotions to a T. I felt like a goddess, and I also felt very small, and young and clinging when I felt his husky arms drawing me closer to him, and his warm, young breath on my cheek and lips.

What could success, of any or all varieties, offer me sweeter than this? The answer is simple, for all who have been loved.

And how I wanted to be loved—so terribly much—that sometimes I fear that there is a lot of trouble ahead for one named Lindsey. I am to be invisible, and they tell me that that is nearly always fatal. I wonder. Jack is not much worried about it, so it would seem, and so I think I shall let the future take care of itself—and Jack of me!

Aunt Cecilia had her Jeff with her all evening, too. They were in the next room, and very, very quiet; so I judge, very ecstatic and happy. My what love does to one's hair and eyes! and as for the rest of one, well, words fail. It is the greatest elixir in the world.

I just know that I shall do some wonderful work, and I am sure that for it this is just a sample of joys to come. Well, after seeing my Jean, I can imagine that I, too, will be as happy; and my work of course will be richer, even as my nature is enriched. It's such a beautiful thought, this.

Heart and Home Problems.

Letters May be Addressed to Mrs. Thompson, in Care of the Gazette

Dear Mrs. Thompson: My parents are very kind to me and give me anything that I need, but my father has always objected to my visiting. I have never been to see a day of my kindred without my parents. I have often been invited to spend the night with my girl friends, but my father would not let me.

When I am invited to spend the night I always give some excuse for not accepting the invitation. I am fourteen years of age. Do you think that I am too young to go visiting? All my friends are nice, sweet, little girls and I regret to turn down their invitations.

DOUBTFUL BLONDE.

Personally I think it would be all right for you to spend the night with a girl friend or to visit relatives. Since your father objects, however, he must have a good reason. I never see to see parents too strict, rather than too lax.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I have been under a constant strain for twelve months or more on account of domestic troubles.

I have a sweet daughter of twenty, all I have to live for. Her father died before she was born. She is working at a cafe and has been for over a couple of years. Her mother is a married man, has a wife and child, and she is infatuated with this man. All I can say to her only makes her stronger for him.

He is of a low class and also has a notorious record; you know what I mean, a man of the world, and one who stands ready to fight with you. My daughter against me, and told her to leave me. He says she is old enough for me not to keep tabs on her.

I have threatened to kill him, and I am tempted to. I really think that he is fit for death. I have called up his wife and told her of his conduct toward my daughter, and it seemed to make her feel that she should go and plead and kill him, but too kind, I don't know what to think of such a woman as that. Her husband talks about her, criticizes her to the point where she never loved her when he married her.

Please tell me what to do. I have become so nervous that I am under the care of a physician.

A BEREAVED MOTHER.

Your daughter has passed beyond your control. Since she will give no heed to what you say, all interference on your part only strengthens her determination to do wrong.

Tell her that from now on your lips will be sealed and you will not express your opinion further, but when she has had time to think, will as a result of wrong doing, you will stand ready to help her and love her.

You being late in trying to govern your daughter, probably you can never get her back into the right way, and you had her own way in spite of your better judgment. She has been a bad girl, but she is a girl, and she will be a girl.

Resign yourself to whatever has happened and try to keep your nerves, and your health so that when the time comes that your daughter needs you, you will be strong and ready to help her.

You know that your daughter is sweet and good, regardless of the bad side she is showing now. Never lose your faith in her. She will be a good girl, and she will be a good woman with your help.

Feathers and Small Shapes Features in Fall Hat Styles

There is no question about it, feathers are the fashionable trimming for fall hats. Velvets invariably have ostrich, curled or uncured, for adornment, and often both ostrich and feathers are used on the same hat. Brown is one of the most popular shades for the coming season. Nigre brown, however, comes to be favored. Black, too, will be fashionable, and just at present some of the rich blue shades, once called electric blue but now called Egyptian.

Here are three models seen at a display of smart hats for street wear with the advance fall fashion show held recently in New York.

At the left is a Napoleon shaped hat of dark brown velvet. Flat brim of ostrich feather edge the brim, while the ornament on the side is lined into a huge "chou" in the back. From the side droops a bunch made of gold. This makes either suit or frock.

The hat at the right is a stunning turban of black velvet which is fast of stiffened ostrich feathers which form the only trimming.

In the center is a smart off-the-face model made of brown panne velvet. It, too, is slightly Napoleonic in shape. Here two bunches of ostrich feathers ornament either side. The crown is soft and gathered but the brim is stiff. All three hats show the decided tendency toward small hats and ostrich trimming.

HOUSEWIVES' MARKET BASKET

What One Can Find in the Food Stores to Feed the Hungry Family

—Vegetables Can Now Be Had in Abundance.

When the local groceries are offering such tempting arrays of fruits and vegetables, it would be well-nigh impossible for the housewife to resist the impulse to fill her market basket to overflowing.

Carrots and beets range from 8 to 10 cents a bunch, each, and nice big ears of green corn are selling at 20 cents a dozen ears. Cabbage may be bought from 8 to 8 cents a pound, and cauliflower is 15 cents a pound. Ripe red tomatoes, just right for salads, may be purchased for 20 cents a pound.

Summer squash at 15 cents a piece, and dry beans at 5 to 10 cents a pound, offer suggestions for the dining menu. Lettuce at 20 cents per head, and peppers at 5 and 7 cents a piece, are welcome additions to the market basket. Celery cabbage is selling in one local market at 10 cents per pound, and sweet potatoes, quite a novelty at this time of year, are 15 cents a pound.

Celery at 15 cents a stalk, or 5 cents a small bunch; plums at 15 cents each, and small ones at 5 cents a piece are on display. Bananas at 14 and 15 cents a pound, oranges at 40 cents a dozen, and lemons at 30 and 40 cents a dozen, are the old standards of the housewife seeking ingredients for salads or refreshing summer drinks. And California sweet cherries, big luscious ones, at 45 cents per pound, make a strong appeal to the housewife.

Eggs selling from 48 cents to 53 cents a dozen, and butter from 50 to 63 cents a pound, are the two staple articles that the housewife never forgets, of course, to put in her basket before she leaves the shop.

ASKS CITIZENS TO SUPPORT GUARD

Head of Company "I" Tank Corps Sees Its Importance Growing Daily

BY CAPT. CLAUDE FEAGIN
With the future of congress to pass the universal service act, the national guard organization becomes increasingly important as the medium through which young men of America may receive a groundwork of military training.

The only difference between a member of the national guard and any other citizen of military age is that the national guardman has accepted his responsibility of citizenship more fully than the civilian. He stands ready at any time to sacrifice personal affairs and comfort to answer the call of duty. In time of war there is no need for enlistment processes or draft boards, or delays for arms or equipment. The guardman is ready to go.

World Not at Peace
The world is more distantly removed from peace today than it was prior to August, 1914. There are 30 petty wars, including one not so petty, in Europe today, which await the wind of circumstance to blaze into another world-wide conflagration. One cannot read the daily press without realizing that this, our own country, is being honed by the elements of discontent. "Red" was once used to designate a color. Now it has a far more sinister meaning. It is a part of the purpose of the national guard to restrict the meaning of this term politically to the designation of the first glorious patriots, the Red, White and Blue. These colors are combined into something more than a bunting to be used infrequently upon holiday occasions. The "Old Glory" is the symbol of that which he determined to preserve, Home, Family, and the right to live a free life.

Stand With the Guard
The national guardman of today has retained his patriotism for every day use. He does not believe in putting it in cold storage. If it was a valuable thing in time of war for a man to give expression of his love for country, it is also fitting that he continue to do so in time of peace. Patriotism is a rare quality which does not diminish with use. Every citizen of patriotic service renders his dynamo and leaves it better fitted for future service.

Stand With the Guard
If business, family or other affairs prevent you from showing your patriotism by affiliating with the guard, do not give expression to non-Americanism by belittling the efforts of Americans who do choose such a method of expression.

Janeville has two units of this new guard. Your cooperation to better represent and protect your community and theirs should the occasion ever arise.
